

Nursing Course Delivery Methods

The nursing curriculum has very vigorous requirements; therefore, it is not realistic to plan for full-time employment while enrolled in the program. Traditional and hybrid are the two delivery methods available for nursing courses with the exception of NUR 112 (Fundamentals). Hybrid is not available for this course in order to better socialize the student to the role of the nurse and give as much faculty support as possible.

The traditional course delivery method is available for all nursing courses. This method requires the student attend class, labs, simulations, clinical experiences as well as testing on campus. Additionally, traditional class sessions are recorded and posted to the electronic course management system for review by students at any time.

The hybrid course delivery method requires the student to be self-directed in seeking to master course content by listening to recorded classes and completing recommended assignments independently. Please note, hybrid also requires the student attend labs, simulations, clinical experiences as well as testing on campus.
